

SCORES OF WOMEN ON ELWELL'S PHONE LIST ARE QUESTIONED

the persons indicated, in order to obtain these Government, failed to make full, complete and true entries in the books of the company.

The second count alleges that on April 5, 1918, James E. Smith and the others unlawfully and corruptly conspired that the said Charles F. Murphy should obtain a larger income and a quick return on his investment, by filing with the collector of Internal Revenue misleading and false entries as to the records of the business.

It is also alleged that intimidation was exercised by those mentioned in the indictment. It recites that they threatened Hartog that they would cut off his supply of glucose and ruin his business unless he paid back to Murphy $125,000 and one-quarter of the profits already made by the business and not subject to reduction through the excess profit tax.

It also states that Hartog was threatened that he would be accused of arson and of unlawfully hoarding sugar and other crimes if he did not do as they desired. Hartog, according to the indictment, was told he would be brought to trial and sent to jail on criminal charges and unless he did as Murphy desired he would be hounded to death and not be allowed to live in New York City. Threats were also made, it is charged, to expose to his wife and the public alleged secrets affecting his relationship with a certain woman whose name is unknown to the Grand Jury.

Louis N. Hartog was head of a company which manufactured Maltodextrine, the principal ingredient of which is glucose. He obtained a $7,000,000 order from the British Government during the war. Later he had difficulty in getting glucose and he expanded his corporation, bringing in Charles F. Murphy, who invested $125,000, after which Hartog obtained glucose more readily from the Corn Products Company, a subsidiary of the Standard Oil Company.

Hartog and Murphy subsequently fell out, Murphy suing Hartog for the recovery of the money he had invested. Hartog, in turn, sued Murphy, Baldwin, McCarthy and the Corn Products Company to recover $100,000 which, he said he lost as a result of Murphy's withdrawal and his consequent inability to obtain glucose from the Corn Products Company.

While these actions were pending, Assistant District Attorney Smith summoned Hartog to his office in an alleged effort to force him to repay to Murphy the $125,000. Smith admits the summons but declares he was working with the Government in the prosecution of sugar profiteers, as Hartog's brother had been fined $5,000 in a Federal Court for profiteering in sugar.

After examining Hartog, the Assistant District Attorney was convinced that Louis Hartog had nothing to do with sugar profiteering. Later it was suggested that because Smith knew "Jimmie" Hines he could arrange for a meeting of all the contesting parties.

At the home of Mr. Hines such a meeting was subsequently held, and the Murphy-Hartog controversy was discussed. Smith now declares that his only interest was in bringing the parties together. Hines contends that there has been an improper use of the subpoena on the part of Smith in summoning Hartog.

The legend, "The Toughest Boy in the Street," appeared under the photograph, and below this:

"This eleven-year-old delinquent a challenge to the community." McCue said that a photographer in 1914 asked him if he didn't want his picture taken for the Boy Scouts. He said yes, and he next saw the picture as described.

GABY DESLYS'S GEMS TO BE SOLD MONDAY

Proceeds Go to Poor—Pearls Called Finest Collection Ever Seen in Paris.

PARIS, June 22.—The jewels of the late Gaby Deslys, the famous French dancer and actress who died Feb. 21 last, were placed on exhibition here today preliminary to their sale on June 23 for the benefit of the poor of the city of Marseilles, as provided in Miss Deslys's will.

According to connoisseurs the collection comprises the finest assortment of pearls ever seen in Paris. Although diamonds, rubies, sapphires, emeralds and other precious stones are adequately represented they are not quite as conspicuous, the dancer's hobby having been pearls.

One necklace contains fifty-seven pearls valued at a million francs and there are two pendant pearls weighing 105 grammes each, being absolutely the same size and weight. Another pearl, black in color, weighs 140 grammes, while there are seven other pearls weighing from 70 to 100 grammes each. All the pearls were selected and matched with exquisite taste.

RELATIVE OF SOCIETY WOMAN IS SOUGHT IN ELWELL CASE

are married are being visited and questioned in the absence of their husbands. Unmarried girls are being questioned without the knowledge of their families.

Elwell, it is said, never lost sight of a woman once he met her. If the woman was not of his kind he had his use for her respectability later in the furtherance of his schemes with other women and girls, it is declared. It was this angle of his life which is making the task of checking up his movements and his acquaintances among the opposite sex such an interminable task.

Because of a mixup in telephone calls, alleged to have been made from the Elwell house early in the morning of the murder, the investigators are speculating on the theory that the murderer lay hidden in the house all night.

This theory is taken with a good deal of reserve, because a man who went there to slay Elwell would hardly wait several hours after Elwell reached home. The same question as to how he got into the house at that hour of the night presents itself as it does if he got in in the morning.

BELIEVED ELWELL HIMSELF ADMITTED SLAYER.

There is a better answer though for the last question. Every door and window, so far as the investigators have determined, was locked, and the answer is that Elwell himself admitted his slayer. If the outer door were open when the milkman and postman arrived, which has been demonstrated, the murderer could have secreted himself in the vestibule and forced his way in when the murdered man opened the inner door to get his mail.

The developments to-day include the search for Miss Margaret Entler, the telephone girl of the Columbus station, who told of the calls in the early morning from the Elwell house. Miss Entler is said to be in Rutherford, N. J.

District Attorney Swann said this morning that he had interviewed William H. Pendleton, a one-time racing partner of Elwell, who told him that no telephone message reached his house in Far Rockaway in the early hours of Friday morning. Miss Entler has told of calls for his number between 2 and 2:30 A. M. Mr. Swann believes at least one call may have been made between 12:30 and 1 A. M., before Elwell got home.

"Mr. Pendleton told me," said the District Attorney, "that his telephone rests on a little table in his room between his bed and that of his wife, with an extension to the maid's room. He was at home Friday night and the phone could not have rung without one of the three hearing it. He said further that he knew of no act of Elwell which would prompt murder, knew of no enemy and never had heard of any threat against his life."

District Attorney Swann has also wired to Miss Elly Hope Anderson, who was with Victor von Schlegel on the Kitz-Carlton fog the night before the murder, asking her to come to New York from Minneapolis to tell her story of that night and next morning.

Mr. Marie Larson, the housekeeper, has added another angle to her story, saying that the chair opposite to that in which Elwell was found was in a different position than when she left the house the day before, indicating that Elwell talked with his murderer before being shot.

One of the earlier stories apparently shattered is that of John Isdale, first officer of the ship Ariano, now at Philadelphia. He had told of seeing a man, supposed to have been Elwell, get out of a racing car at the Elwell home at 245 the morning of the murder. Isdale was visiting his uncle two doors away. Mr. Swann has given out an official statement:

"Capt. Carey of the Homicide Squad has a memorandum from Detective Sergeant Reynolds of the Homicide Squad, who interviewed John Isdale, first officer on the British SS. Ariano, Pier 38, South Philadelphia, who from the window of 222 West 70th Street saw a racing car standing in front of the second small house from the house he was in; he saw no one enter or leave the car; neither did he see who was in the car; he is unable to tell whether the hood was up or down; he could not tell whether the lights were burning. He could not tell the color of the machine. He says the exact time was 3:45 A. M., New York time. He heard the door of the auto close before he went to the window."

"The reason for the re-examination, he said, was a statement attributed by a morning newspaper to Mrs. Hardy, quoting her as expressing the belief that the murder was the result of a race horse deal."

Capt. T. H. Kitchins of Canada, who had paid the young woman's passage from England to Halifax, and also from Halifax to New York, was not present to intercede for his former fiancée. Capt. Paul Miller, a fellow officer and a fellow passenger across the ocean, who had wooed and won Miss Butler away from Capt. Kitchins, was present and did intercede unsuccessfully for the young woman.

Miss Butler said to-day that she would not appeal the order refusing her permission to land in this country. Officially said she estimated that she would marry Mr. Miller in England. She asked that she be sent back on the Cunard liner Caronia which is booked to leave next Saturday.

BARRICADE FIGHTS IN LONDONDERRY

Streets Deserted Except by Belligerents—Citizens Remain Under Cover.

LONDONDERRY, June 23 (Associated Press).—Londonderry was again the scene of rioting to-day. At 5:30 o'clock this morning fighting was going on between opposing parties of Unionists and Nationalists, who shot over barricades that had been erected at various vantage points. The military was active in preventing citizens from venturing into the streets, which were deserted except by the active belligerents.

Looting occurred in the city during the night. The military remained passive, the troops watching bodies of armed men pass through the side streets to their battle positions. Considerable fighting occurred on the water front, which was cut off from the rest of the town. The Central Police Station was isolated from the other stations and the police virtually were besieged.

It was rumored that a force of Sinn Féiners was gathering outside the city and also that the Irish Volunteers were about to take a hand. No more troops had arrived in Londonderry up to this afternoon.

DOOLING TO CALL MRS. HARDY TO TELL OF ELWELL HORSE DEAL

Former Friend of Racing Man Quoted as Blaming Track Hanger-On for Murder.

Assistant District Attorney Dooling announced this afternoon that he will send for Mrs. Amelia Hardy, at one time one of Elwell's close friends, and question her again.

The reason for the re-examination, he said, was a statement attributed by a morning newspaper to Mrs. Hardy, quoting her as expressing the belief that the murder was the result of a race horse deal.

"All this is new to me," said Mr. Dooling. "Mrs. Hardy was questioned by me and Mr. Tully and she did not mention anything like this. If she has such information, or any basis for such a belief as she is represented to hold, it would seem that she must have gathered her facts very recently."

"The horse deal she is quoted as mentioning is the sale of the horse known as Pastoral Swath. The horse was sold on June 4 and paid for on June 8. If Mrs. Hardy has information in connection with the sale it would seem that she must have acquired it after June 4 or 8. But she told us she had not seen Elwell since April. Of course it will now be necessary to question her again."
